A data set of motor vehicle collisions from Seattle is used to determine the relationship between the severity of motor vehicle accidents and various weather and road conditions. After cleaning the data set and dropping unneeded features, machine learning will be used to classify motor vehicle accident severity relative to weather and road conditions.